that has sneezed three times is considered in good health, and may be safely dismissed from a hospital.

The Siamese explain it differently. They say there are in the infernal regions Judges who write all the sins of men in large books. The Supreme Judge is continually occupied in reviewing the collection, and the unfortunate mortal whose sins fall beneath the eye of the Judge will sneeze as he reads. Thus shewing how useful it is to cryout for divine aid at such a moment.

The reason of its use as an angury has not been discovered. But sneeding has everywhere and in all times been considered worthy of a certain degree of attention. According to the Jews the custom of wishing well to one who sneezes dates far, far back, even to the creation. When Adam was driven out of paradise, so runs the tradition, God ordained that man should sneeze only at the moment of death. But now sneeding is looked on as a return to life.
